

MAROMA HAS THE TRAVEL WORLD TALKING

“I was expecting breathtaking beaches. But I didn’t expect such incredible service. Our room, complete with a canopied bed, was cleaned at least twice a day. Every night we returned to lighted candles, a friendly goodnight note and two scrumptious chocolates. Every morning, a tray of fresh-squeezed orange juice and hot coffee beckoned from our porch. Not to mention the other amenities . . .

Detroit News and Free Press

“An architectural delight of thatched roofs, white-stone flooring embedded with shell fossils, soaring arches, organic lines and ornamental niches, Maroma is enchantingly decorated with original art works by Bertrand Castelli, the finest local handicrafts, and handcrafted furniture. Dining at Maroma - like everything else - is by careful design, a feast for the senses whether it's an al fresco breakfast or lunch at Cilantro or an exquisite beachfront dinner with wine and candlelight at El Sol.”

Recommend Magazine

“Maroma is a world apart, a small, luxurious hideaway dedicated to pampering guests with personal service, fine cuisine, and privacy, all in a beautiful and natural setting.”

Luxury Living

“The service is without fault, the beach is gorgeous and the rooms are one-of-a-kind. But the most romantic aspect? Every night, the staff lights nearly 1,000 candles, which float in the pool, flicker along each stone walkway and line the garden path all the way to the beach.”

More Magazine

“Every evening, as many as 1,000 candles are lit on the winding pathways and spiral staircases of Maroma Resort and Spa, a sensuous property rising above the grounds of a former coconut plantation. But that’s nothing compared to the fiery torches that will light up the sugar-spun Caribbean sands on our nuptial night. From signature margaritas made with Mayan honey liqueur to moonlit Yucatan fiestas serenaded by mariachis, Maroma beckons couples who want to be utterly spoiled all the way down the aisle.”

(Destination Weddings Feature)

“The sea here is ivory-turquoise, a balm to eyes decolorized by the cardboard gray of a tenacious New York winter. When wind and tide are right, there's even some wave action The beauty of strand and sea moves one guest to describe the scene as edible, a new one on me. But I know what she means. And almost everyone succumbs”

Luxury SpaFinder

“Maybe true luxury is more than a cotton caftan, a tub of champagne and outrageous chocolates left on your hand-loomed bedding. Maroma offers all these, but luxury here is more an awakening – the realization that you really matter as a guest, that her, despite your residue of gringo cynicism, you will be the quiet center of attention. You may even wonder where everybody else went.”

Distinction Magazine

“Maroma, heralded for its impeccable service and arresting views . . . Patrons of Maroma spend most of their days lounging in the shade, every now and again moving a limb to raise a bright flag, thereby noting their need for sustenance – be it fresh guacamole or more substantial fajitas for two. It takes employees less than an hour to know guests on a first-name basis, an effort that makes visitors feel like members of the Maroma family.”

Coastal Living

“One of the best beaches around, with clear waters and a wide expanse of silky sand.”

New York Times

“One of my top Mayan experiences is the ancient purifying steam bath known as Temazcal, done to perfection at the welcoming Maroma Resort & Spa.”

Modern Bride

“For those seeking the ultimate in personal service and privacy, Maroma fits the bill.”

Elite Traveler

“This is a memory-making hideaway . . . A Dream Holiday Retreat – Paradise, Mexican Style”

ONMagazine

“A perfect 10 - . . . the real glory here is the 750 feet of dazzling white beach. A guided morning walk through some of the property’s 500 acres of jungle may end at the shoreline, splashing through water where petal-soft baby stingrays frolic in the shallows.”

The Miami Herald

The architectural plans for the spa were drawn out in the sand in accordance with Mayan custom. And so Kinan Spa at Maroma Resort on the Riviera Maya coast of Mexico, rose from the ground. The result is a mix of jungle culture and sophisticated aris....Aligning inner well-being with luxurious, rejuvenating touch is Kinan's holistic ambition. Along the way, guests are likely to have little doubt that they're having their own, very special, day in the sun.

Mexico's Caribbean coast is also magnificent: a stretch of powdery white sand lapped by a warm turquoise ocean and close to the Mesc-American reef, second only to the Great Barrier in size and biodiversity. Maroma, the Orient-Express-run property featured in NB Yucatan, sits on a bay the Travel Channel has called the best in the world... it is stunning, wild and undeveloped.

Financial Times (U.S. Edition)

“On my first evening, I followed the flickering lights of a thousand candles along a maze of stone walkways, wandering through gardens of orchids and palm trees until I found myself on a narrow crescent of fine white sand: a heavenly boarder between jungle and sea.”

Outside Magazine

“Ogling the purple seafans, rusty staghorn coral, green anemones and schools of reef fish while bobbing on the sea’s surface is as strenuous as it gets around Maroma. And that’s just the way folks like it.” “Distractions are banished; there are not TVs in the room, no whining motorboats. But there are kites to fly by day and 1,000 candles lining the jungle paths at night.”

Celebrated Living

Andrew Harper’s Travel

“The scene” The whitewashed hotel on the grounds of a former coconut plantation exudes Mexican ambience with its thick walls, talavera tile, mahogany accents and pink stairways that wind up to terraces and views for miles across the jungle. The atmosphere, particularly in the original home, is upscale but homelike. There’s no chekc0in area, and “hospitality girls” dressed in Maya-inspired garb circulate among guests to fulfill their wished. Even the grounds’ crew, in bright aprons with matching bands on their straw hats; look as if they were sent by central casting.”

USA Today

“Why do the flashy and fabulous flock to this secluded Caribbean gem? Maybe it’s because with only 58 rooms – all featuring round tubs, hand-painted tiles, and oversize veranda hammocks – they can be sure that autograph seekers won’t mob them at the peaceful garden-enclosed pool. Gourmands might be lured by the Maya restaurant, where the seafood with guajillo chili is even more succulent when accompanied by the piano player’s tunes. But all things aside, they, like you, are probably simply seeking a small touch of Mexican magic.” Brides

“Maroma Resort and Spa is one of the most upscale retreats on the Riviera Maya, with 58 rooms set on a 500-acre coconut plantation north of Playa del Carman. It has a myriad swimming pool, a lovely beach, spa gourmet restaurant, attentive staff and excursion options that include tours of Maya and scuba diving lessons.”

Los Angeles Times

“The romantic, whitewashed Moorish compound has expanded with 22 additional rooms and a new spa. It is the Riviera Maya’s gold standard against which a crop of newcomers aim to compete.”

American Way

“The Maroma Resort and Spa, located on an idyllic stretch of the Riviera Maya on the Yucatan Peninsula . . . peacocks strutting in the main courtyard, inviting hammocks strewn about the property, colorful sunsets and the placid turquoise sea.”

Bridal Guide

“The Maroma Resort and Spa in Mexico’s Yucatan Peninsula sets the standard for hospitality. The highlight of the spa was the Temazcal treatment, an ancient Maya ritual . . .”

Catalina

“. . . once you arrive and are warmly greeted with the resort’s legendary Maroma Margarita, it’s a struggle to trek out to explore . . . Hard as it is to resist lazing in Maroma’s hammocks all day, lounging on the beach, or being pampered by one of the spa treatments available . . .”

House

“If you thought luxury and fabulous dining couldn’t exist in the middle of Mexico’s Yucatan Peninsula, then you haven’t been to Maroma . . . romantic rooms with hammock-strung balconies . . . the essence of quiet beauty . . . its garden of sea-grape trees, coconut palms and hibiscus . . . Two Hundred Acres of Solitude . . .”

Town & Country

“A cadre of 25 new Hotels (including Maroma) is redefining hospitality for the twenty-first century . . . their relative youth has allowed them to capitalize on the maxims governing innkeeping . . . namely, individuality, outstanding design, and dedication to service. What’s more, their sense of place, sophistication and sheer aplomb aren’t simply a reflection of their environment, but an improvement upon it . . . they aren’t just the latest, they are the greatest-instant-classics that eclipsed the competition the minute they opened for business.”

Condé Nast Traveler

In the breeze swept foyer (gazing out to the richly manicured palm-studded grounds) a warm and amiable house-proud staff bids you welcome with a refreshing Margarita. The gracious Maya staff represents the very essence of Maroma and will make you feel like a special guest at an informally relaxing private estate. Service is genuinely sincere and from the heart.”

Andrew Harper’s Report

“On an unspoiled beach 20 miles down the coast from built up Cancun, and a million miles away in spirit, a secluded little hotel called Maroma opened its doors. Environmentalists hope that its small-is-beautiful approach is the shape of things to come.”

Vogue (UK)

“Maroma is the best on the coast; it has a reputation as a bit of a celebrity hideaway spot, but having auditioned successfully I was received with total charm. It is like emerging from the jungle into a Maya temple precinct. Through the entrance you have a leafy vista through the gardens, through the dining room, across a terrace to the sea. It can stop a hardened traveler in his tracks.”

The London Times

“Maroma’s “handmade hospitality”, privacy beautiful natural setting and ecological awareness have received rave reviews from the most prestigious international media and from our delighted guests who return again and again to their “home” in the Mexican Caribbean.” Filmed for “The 10 Best Beaches in the World”

The Travel Channel

“Maroma occupies its site in a wonderfully indigenous way, as if it had always been there. Its buildings seem to have evolved organically around the garden, an oasis between the jungle on one side and the windswept beach on the other. The rooms, reached by various walkways and outdoor stairways that add to the air of privacy, are all different.”
